The historic Workhouse

The Llanfyllin Union Workhouse, known locally as Y Dolydd, is home to a project which is finding new and viable community uses for one of Wales's most remarkable historic buildings.

Built in 1839 to house up to 250 paupers from North Montgomeryshire, the Workhouse blends classical grandeur with the durability of local stone and slate and is one of the finest surviving examples of its type. It was chosen to represent Wales on BBC 'Restoration' and was one of the Victorian Society's Top Ten Buildings at Risk.

Who we are

The Workhouse is owned by the Llanfyllin Dolydd Building Preservation Trust, a registered charity run and controlled by its members. We bought the building, empty and derelict, with a loan from the Architectural Heritage Fund, now replaced by a mortgage from the Ecology Building Society.

What we do

The Trust has obtained planning consent for the building to become a community enterprise, and work is under way. The plans include:

- five units of housing
- workshops and studios for artists and small businesses
- a bunkhouse and short stay accommodation for families, with camping
- a gallery and centre for the arts
- meeting rooms and educational facilities
- a venue, bar and cafe
- a courtyard theatre
- a community garden, wildflower meadow and field
- a History Centre telling the story of the building and those who lived there.

We promote and host concerts, drama, film and exhibitions; educational courses and activities; social and fund-raising events; gigs and private functions.

Renovation and restoration work on the building is ongoing, much of it done by volunteers using recycled materials and funded through grants or our own efforts. We believe strongly in sustainability and respect for the environment. We also work hard to maintain an income stream to cover mortgage and insurance costs.

How you can help

We need and welcome members who would like to get involved or just to support us through their subscriptions. Membership costs £12 a year, or a pound a month. A Newsletter goes out in spring and autumn, and a website keeps people in touch. Volunteering opportunities include work on the building and site; organising or helping with events; publicity, marketing and fund raising or researching the history of the building and its inmates.

Please join us, and be part of a unique and vibrant community project.
